Severe reversible cardiomyopathy associated with systemic vasculitis in primary Sjögren's syndrome

Severe reversible cardiomyopathy associated with systemic

Myocardial dysfunction is a common complication in patients with SIRS secondary to sepsis and is associated with an increased risk of mortality of up to 70–90 % [2, 3]. Systolic and diastolic myocardial dysfunction has been described in other situations of SIRS such as severe trauma and burns [4].

Multiple reviews have been published to discuss these and other possible mechanisms of sepsis-induced cardiomyopathy [8, 27–30]. Acute hyperglycemic crisis can cause SIRS, and both hyperosmolar hyperglycemic non-ketotic syndrome and diabetic ketoacidosis are associated with a severe inflammatory state [31].

Case report: severe reversible cardiomyopathy associated

In the absence of ischemic heart disease, severe acute reversible myocardial dysfunction is uncommon, with sepsis most often being implicated in the ICU. We report a 38-year-old woman who developed profound transient myocardial depression due to nonseptic systemic inflammatory response syndrome caused by a necrotic kidney. Hemodynamic parameters and echocardiographic findings improved ...

Cardiomyopathy. Cardiomyopathies are a heterogeneous group of diseases of the myocardium associated with mechanical and/or electrical dysfunction that usually (but not invariably) exhibit inappropriate ventricular hypertrophy or dilatation and are due to a variety of causes that frequently are genetic.

Amyloid cardiomyopathy, due to amyloid infiltration of the myocardium can occur in all forms of systemic amyloid. It is a serious medical disorder with an average survival of <6 months. 1 We report a case of restrictive cardiomyopathy secondary to systemic AL amyloidosis that illustrates how recent developments in diagnosis, monitoring and treatment of the disorder can substantially improve prognosis.

Other symptoms may include shortness of breath on exertion or chest pain. If there is an electrical rhythm disturbance associated with the cardiomyopathy, abnormal heartbeats may cause palpitations and the sensation of an occasional skipped heart beat or lethal heart rhythms, such as ventricular fibrillation.

!Figure][1] Stress cardiomyopathy is an acute reversible heart failure syndrome initially believed to represent a benign condition due to its self-limiting clinical course, but now recognized to be associated with a non-negligible rate of serious complications such as ventricular arrhythmias, systemic thromboembolism, and cardiogenic shock.
